I don't want to change existing import statements or names. I want to create wrap files as package. So if a file in src package then, src/package/filename, let's say, src/package/name_of_file.py I've found that we can do by using ant script, is there any other way? A: Since you're talking about modifying existing files, you're better off sticking to PyChecker or disassembler/compiler. For PyChecker, it is as simple as opening the original file in your editor, and running pychecker. The results are written to the cwd. For decompilation (cx_oracle), you can write that to stdout, rather than anywhere more specific. It seems to work mostly as advertised, although with certain cases, a little manual tweaking can f678ea9f9e
